

BETTER TENT/CAMP LIFE

- If you are planning on bringing ramen noodles, porridge or teabags, having your own kettle is a brilliant idea! This way you can access hot water anytime and won't have to bother asking cooks to boil it for you.
- Bring LOADS of pillows, blankets and bedsheets. Seriously. Temperature drops significantly in the night time so make sure to not repeat my never-ending mistake of having not enough warm covers. Besides, having pile of pillows will save you from dying of discomfort.
- Big flashlight or some bright source of light will save you when sun sets and you still have love letters to write in your tent. Instead of holding a small flashlight in your hands you can just put the big one on the ground and see everything with no problem.
- We NEED to talk more about air freshener. It's never in the camp by default and I bet everyone wants to leave the toilet refreshed and not stinky, so invest into some AirWick or whatever, that will help out plenty.
- As you will go swimming pretty much every day your swimsuit and towel will definitely be wet. From personal experience radiators in the house are not nearly enough to fit everyone's stuff so you can bring some rope to tie around trees in Mušiejų campsite or small clothes drying rack for towels and swimsuits and everything else that might get wet.
- Since camp happens in summer, sun will shine a lot and tents might become pretty heated in no time. Keep your tent from becoming unbearably hot by using a reflective blanket to deflect sunlight!
- Not a must, but you can keep your tent organized by bringing baskets for shoes, dirty clothes and garbage. It's always nice when you don't have to dig through piles of random things to find something.

MORE BEGINNER TIPS

- Snacks. Snacks. Snacks. Snacks. Snacks. Snacks. Snacks. Snacks. Like you WILL want a snack, you WILL get hungry I'M TELLING YOU AND YOU BETTER LISTEN. Bring loads of snacks because fresh air messes with your brain somehow and you get hungry faster. Besides it's always nice to munch on something in stressful situations or by the campfire.
- Bring sunscreen with you. That way you won't look like a redneck farmer from America and those sunburns do be sensitive.
- Just like piles and piles of bedsheets, bring piles of blankets with you. They have many uses: comfy sleeping in class, warm evening circle, random picnic during lunchtime, you name it. Also, warm fit for evening is a must.
- All people with music addiction should dig up their old mp3 player and take it with them to the camp. Staff seriously confiscates all phones strictly, so no luck going to sleep with Spotify "enemies to lovers 100k. slow-burn" playlist on.

You're welcome. Saulė.
